Saskatchewan's photo-radar plan faces criticism

Minister cites safety. System described as 'cash grab' by taxpayers federation

ROSS ROMANIUK
Metro in Regina

Saskatchewan's highways ministry will soon be taking photographs of speeding vehicles in highway construction zones — and, according to critics, allowing the government to take cash out of drivers' wallets far too easily.

The province's plan to implement photo radar this summer to crack down on speeding in roadwork areas has prompted the Canadian Taxpayers Federation (CTF) to point out the accusations of abuse that other cities and provinces using the technology have faced.

"The program has been an absolute cash grab in Manitoba. Traffic safety is always secondary to that government's desires to pilfer from the pockets of taxpayers," Colin Craig, director of the CTF's Prairie region, said in Regina on Wednesday.

Craig pointed out that in Winnipeg, where photo radar has been in use for about a decade, city officials and police have been under fire for years amid accusations that they allow a contracted service provider's mobile units to set up in street zones where speed limits are poorly posted — thus hitting motorists with hefty fines after many didn't even know they had broken the law.

But Saskatchewan Highways and Infrastructure Minister Don McMorris said the province is "absolutely not" bringing in photo radar as a revenue generator.

He stressed that it's launching the system — using camera units on a rotating basis — only to create safer conditions for work crews following the death last summer of 18-year-old Ashley Richards, who was holding flags at a construction site near Midale when she was fatally struck by a vehicle.

"This is to protect workers," McMorris said, noting that construction firms have been consulted.

"They say the general public drives way too fast through speed zones. This is purely, purely, a safety issue."

But Craig said that if Saskatchewan officials were intent on improving safety, "they would have real police officers actually pull dangerous drivers over" and thereby effect stronger deterrence than is achieved by tickets and fines that arrive through the mail.

A police officer in Calgary uses a photo-radar unit for speed enforcement last year. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation warns that photo-radar systems are too easily abused by governments so as to be far more focused on generating revenue than on traffic safety. METRO FILE

Convicted after retrial

Former teacher spared jail time after sex with boy

A former Saskatchewan teacher found guilty of sexually exploiting a Grade 9 student won't be going to jail.

A judge has handed Bonnie McLachlan an 18-month conditional sentence.

She must also complete 200 hours of community service, and her name will be listed on the national sex-offender registry.

A jury found the woman guilty last week of initiating a sexual relationship with the 15-year-old student at the Prince Albert school where she worked in the 1990s.

It was McLachlan's second trial on the charge — she was acquitted in 2011, and the Crown appealed and won a new trial.

The victim, who is now in his thirties, was not in court for the sentencing decision.

He earlier testified that his first sexual encounter with the married teacher was in her car after a workout at a fitness gym.

Motive unknown

Teen recovering from shotgun blast

A 15-year-old boy who was hit by shotgun pellets near a Saskatoon convenience store was in stable condition Wednesday.

The shooting happened early Tuesday evening on the city's west side.

Police say the boy went into the store saying he needed an ambulance.

He had a pellet hole in each arm from a single shotgun blast.

Several officers and a police dog searched a nearby apartment building, but a lone male suspect believed responsible was not found.

Investigators say the motive for the shooting is still unknown.

MoSoFest 2013 is a recipe for one big rocking party

June 12 to 15. Novelty and variety were key in whittling down 200 submissions to 30 acts

JANE CAULFIELD

Take more than 30 bands and musicians, add six venues, a dash of secret shows and bake over three days — and what do you get? The massive music festival MoSoFEST, taking over the Broadway area June 12 to 15.

The festival aims to showcase musical talent coming out of Saskatchewan, while simultaneously inviting a few out-of-province performers to join in.

"The beautiful thing about Saskatchewan music is that there are just so many bands to pick from," said organizer Matt Voyno. "We definitely want to showcase the emerging talent."

Now in its third year, the organizing committee received over 200 submissions from bands looking to play. Choosing which wasn't easy, but Voyno said the goal was to keep the lineup diverse and fresh.

"Going forward, we are going to try to include more and more of Saskatoon's music communities," said Voyno. "The idea is that each year is a new festival with new acts."

The festival is twinned with MoSo Conference, which celebrates social media, technology and mobile development.

Voyno says that having bands play at the venues in the evening, while MoSo Conference uses the same venues during the day, "is going to create a lot more interactions with music and technology."

Acts and info

The bands playing at this year's festival include Astronautalis, The Deep Dark Woods, Rah Rah, Close Talker, Ben Caplan and Ladyhawk.

VIA Rail accused met an al-Qaida mole, sources say

Court outburst. Criminal Code 'is not a holy book,' says the man arrested in alleged plot to hit passenger train

The Montreal suspect accused of plotting a terror attack on a passenger train allegedly met with an al-Qaida operative before coming to Canada in the summer of 2008, sources say.

And this put him on the radar of security officials here, say the sources, who have knowledge of the investigation into the alleged VIA Rail plot.

Tunisian-born Chiheb Esseghaier has been under surveillance for a year, and police became increasingly concerned after what was seen as erratic conduct aboard an airliner en route to Mexico last spring. The event resulted in no charges, but worried law enforcement.

However, it was a recent change in behaviour that triggered police to arrest him at a McDonald's in Montreal's Central Station — not political expediency or the Boston bombing, sources said.

His co-accused, Raed Jaser, was arrested at his North York workplace on Monday.

In a Toronto court Wednesday, Esseghaier asked to speak, saying, "We know that this Criminal Code is not a holy book."

"It's just written by set of creations and the creations they're not perfect because only the creator is perfect," he added.

Vote stirs fears over liberties

MPs have voted to give Canadian officials "exceptional" powers to probe potential terrorist acts — powers that critics say trample on civil liberties.

Anti-terror legislation passed Wednesday will enable preventive arrests, meaning Canadians can be held for up to three days without charge.

And it opens the door to investigative hearings where people can be compelled to testify under threat of detention.

Pimping trial. Why did police take three weeks to make an arrest?

GRAHAM LANKTREE
Metro in Ottawa

A disturbing fact has become apparent in the Ottawa trial of three accused teen pimps.

After the first alleged victim complained to police, it took cops almost three weeks to make an arrest.

Meanwhile, the girls are alleged to have pimped out two other teens and sexually assaulted three more.

As the first alleged victim in the case took the stand this week, the 18-year-old revealed how the first john she met the night of May 18, 2012 — when she was 17 — made her dress up in a pink bikini with gold leggings before he had sex with her without a condom, against her will.

Last week, the girl's mother testified how the next day — May 19 — police took a statement from her about what happened after she heard the story from her daughter.

The following week on May 25, police recorded a video interview with the alleged victim.

Yet a second girl was allegedly victimized by all three accused on May 30, 2012.

That girl, the Crown alleges, was robbed and brought to three different johns before she made it home and her mom called 911.

Ultimately, two of the accused teenage pimps were arrested on June 8 and 9, 2012.

The three, who cannot be identified by law, are charged with human trafficking, forcible confinement, assault, robbery and uttering threats.

'Wayne Mustardson' feels a seal-hunt chill

A satirical campaign against the Canadian seal hunt by the International Fund for Animal Welfare got a chilly reception from Inuit demonstrators on Parliament Hill Wednesday.

A staged appearance by "Wayne Mustardson, Minister of Obsolete Industries," to announce fictional tax credits for items like sealskin curtains and seal-blubber house paint, ended up being heckled by a small crowd that included aboriginal seal-hunt advocate Aaju Peter.

Peter accused the animal-rights activists of "destroying livelihoods of East Coast sealers, destroying livelihoods of Inuit families."

"Do you even you what you're talking about?" Peter asked.

IFAW spokesperson Michelle Cliffe said the demonstrators' hostility was misplaced because their campaign is not aimed at the aboriginal seal hunt.

"We don't know of any animal-welfare group that's opposed to Inuit subsistence hunting, so the discussion is an unfortunate one, but there's that misunderstanding," she said.

Morley Hanson, an instructor with Nunavut Sivuniksavut, an Inuit college program in Ottawa, accompanied his students to the demonstration.

As far as he was concerned, IFAW's attempts at humour fell flat.

"Buffoonery like this, political theatre like this guy just put on just shows great disrespect to a large portion of Canadian society," he said.

"I think that's deplorable," he added.

Woman must remove niqab in court: Judge

Sexual-assault trial. Ontario judge concerned woman's covered face would hinder her credibility

An Ontario judge says a woman's niqab "masks her demeanour and blocks both effective cross-examination by counsel for the accused and assessment of her credibility by the trier of fact." GETTY IMAGES FILE

An Ontario judge has ruled that a woman must remove her veil to testify against the men she is accusing of sexual assault.

The judge says the woman's niqab "masks her demeanour and blocks both effective cross-examination by counsel for the accused and assessment of her credibility by the trier of fact."

The 37-year-old woman, known only as N.S., alleges two men sexually assaulted her over five years, starting when she was six years old.

The question of whether she should be allowed to testify while wearing her niqab went to the Supreme Court, which issued a split decision but set out a test for judges to decide in individual cases.

The case is now back in provincial court, and Judge Norris Weisman ruled the woman must remove her veil to testify.

Weisman noted that he had to balance her religious freedom with the accused men's right to a fair trial, but in the end he was concerned that her face covering would hinder assessment of her credibility, possibly resulting in wrongful convictions. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Death penalty still looms for abortion doctor

An abortion provider charged with killing babies after they were born alive won a reprieve when a judge threw out three murder counts, but the death penalty still looms if he is convicted in four other newborn deaths.

Dr. Kermit Gosnell has been in prison since a 2011 grand jury report that described his outdated West Philadelphia clinic as "a house of horrors."

Judge Jeffrey Minehart had ruled Tuesday that prosecutors over the past month failed to make a case on three of the seven first-degree murder counts.

Rehtaeh Parsons. PM, justice minister pushing tough cyberbullying laws

A crime is a crime, regardless of whether it happens on the Internet, Prime Minister Stephen Harper said Wednesday as his government promised to expedite efforts to create a new law against cyberbullying.

Harper's comments followed his meeting Tuesday with the parents of Rehtaeh Parsons, the Nova Scotia teenager who took her own life earlier this month. Parsons' parents want federal laws beefed up so more can be done to combat cybercrime.

Justice Minister Rob Nicholson, meanwhile, pushed his provincial and territorial counterparts Wednesday to speed up efforts to create a law that would curb cyberbullying. Those ministers gave him the go-ahead, Nicholson said.

"Today, when I met with my counterparts, I recommended that we expedite the review of our laws by June and I was pleased to receive unanimous support," Nicholson said in an emailed statement. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canadians paying off debt faster

Fewer Canadians are letting their debt repayments lapse for more than three months compared with a year ago, according to a report by Equifax Canada.

The study found that the percentage of unpaid non-mortgage debt classified as going into 90-day delinquency was a moderate 1.2 per cent in the first quarter of this year, a slight increase from 1.19 per cent in the fourth quarter.

But Nadim Abdo, Equifax's vice-president of consulting solutions, says this rate was markedly lower compared with 1.39 per cent in the first quarter of 2012. "This is a very positive story. It shows a lot of financial control. People are not kind of going crazy spending when they shouldn't be spending." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Mobile cheque cashing arrives north of border

Banking. To make a deposit, just snap a couple of photos with your smartphone

The technology has been around for a few years in the U.S., but Canadian consumers are finally getting access to a mobile tool to cash their cheques by taking a photo with their smartphone.

This week, the Westminster Savings credit union in B.C. began accepting cheque deposits with its mobile app. Meridian in Ontario and Affinity Credit Union in Saskatchewan are set to follow suit next month. "Anything that we can imagine we can do in the branch or online our members are looking to do eventually on our phones," said Meridian's senior vice president and chief information officer Gary Genik.

"One of the last things left for members to drive them into the branch ... is to actually deposit and get access to cash. This provides the ability to deposit a cheque from the comfort of their own home, office, cottage — wherever they happen to be."

The technology is simple. Users just need to take photos of the front and back of a cheque to cash it within the app. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Barrick under fire on all fronts

Protesters display an effigy of Barrick Gold Corp.'s chairman and founder Peter Munk outside Toronto's Metro Convention Centre Wednesday as the mining company held its annual meeting. While the protesters focused on environmental issues and corporate responsibility, shareholders expressed their disapproval by voting against an executive pay resolution. Barrick had come under fire for a $11.9-million signing bonus paid to co-chairman John Thornton that was part of a $17-million payment package he received last year. The company has also been hit hard by falling gold prices, and work on its Pascua-Lama mine — which straddles the border of Chile and Argentina — was suspended by a Chilean appeals court amid environmental concerns about the construction of the world's highest-altitude gold and silver mine. "This has been a tough year for Barrick and our shareholders. It seems as if our company has been under siege by several disappointments and setbacks," CEO Jamie Sokalsky told the meeting. BUT THEY'RE CANADIAN ...

HE SAYS

John Mazerolle
metronews.ca

If there are two topics that all Canadians love, they are taxes and history. As the tax deadline approaches, I thought it important to look back at how Canadians came to be the happy, taxpaying nation that we are today.

Strap yourself in. It's a wild ride.

Time is Money: A History of Canadian Taxes

1500s: Native groups collect percentages of food from passing European explorers. The Europeans are angry at first, but they are also early Canadians: They calm down when they learn that low-income explorers can reclaim a percentage of their cornmeal at the end of each fiscal year by attaching schedule C of form 1256 to their tax return and checking the box "voyageurs, door-to-door salesmen and other itinerant workers."

1652: Louis XIV of France imposes a 10 per cent tax on moose pelts in his colony. At the time, this was considered a sin tax. You don't want to know.

1751: Nova Scotia begins charging duties on billiard tables. Furious Nova Scotians, disguised as aboriginals, raid three ships in Halifax Harbour and try to throw hundreds of billiard tables into the sea, but only manage to throw out their backs. They're angry at first, but also Canadian: They decide to get blind-drunk instead, kicking off a tradition still observed by Haligonians to this day.

1867: Canada (now better known as The Harper Government) is created, forcing the need for tax-funded flags, calendars, and pencils with flags on them. The federal government is given the high-cost items of the time, such as railway buildings and finding the best performers for the big Canada Day bash. Canadians are angry at first, but they're Canadian: They calm down when they see that the feds scored Franz Liszt for the Parliament Hill concert.

1884: The federal government places a vice tax on snuff. In an attempt to counter the obvious moral issues, the government labels each snuff tin with a 1-88-SNUFF-OUT number and a message asking, "Snuffed Enuff?"

1917: Prime Minister Robert Borden introduces the Income War Tax Act, saying that shortly after the war "the measure should be definitely reviewed." The official Hansard transcript adds that the prime minister gave big knowing winks throughout his comments before giving a running high-five to everyone in the front row of the House of Commons.

1927: The Department of National Revenue is created. To keep taxes down, the government promises the new department will be a low-cost affair with only one person to answer the phone for the whole country, an edict that is still in place.

1960s: The government begins using computers to collect tax information, guaranteeing that employees who had previously found the deluge of tax returns unmanageable could now sooth their nerves with games of Solitaire and Minesweeper.

1993: The Liberals break an election promise to eliminate the GST. After years of being calmly Canadian, taxpayers have finally had enough and punish the Liberals by tossing them from office 13 years later.

And that's a look at Canadian tax history. If it ever angers you, arm yourself with knowledge. Once you've read about important moments like Lawson v. Interior Tree Fruit and Vegetables Committee of Direction (that's real, I swear), you'll be calm again. If not comatose.

Awards host a big fan of ad lib

SCMAs. Aaron Pitchett will be leaving his ego at the door when he emcees the Saskatchewan Country Music Awards

BACKSTAGE PASS
Simon Hiatt
saskatoon@metronews.ca

Someone who's been on the music scene for two decades isn't typically viewed as a rookie, but there may be a couple of times this weekend during the Saskatchewan Country Music Awards and festival when Aaron Pritchett feels like the new kid on the block.

In addition to playing the New Artist Cabaret, albeit as the special guest, he will be hosting the Awards show Saturday night; the first time he has emceed an event in Saskatchewan.

"I didn't expect to get asked to do it but I'm not one to turn away hosting of any kind," said Pritchett.

While it may seem odd for a B.C. boy to helm Saskatchewan's big show, Pritchett has become somewhat of the go-to guy in country music when it comes to hosting events. His combination of comedic and musical talents has had him in demand across Canada.

"I don't really like to plan too much; I'm an ad libber," said Pritchett.

"I think that's what people might like about me in that role is I'm off the cuff and tend to make it up as I go as opposed to just following the script."

Although almost all bands and musicians start off small, for a while it looked like Pritchett might spend his entire career toiling in obscurity.

"I played the clubs in Vancouver and Alberta for 10 years or so and made money and had a family that I supported and that was my main focus."

Pritchett admits he believed he was destined for stardom at an early age and "had a bit of chip on his shoulder" when it didn't happen initially.

It wasn't until he hit his early 30s that the breaks finally started to go his way. He won a national contest called Project Discovery in Calgary that earned him attention as well as $10,000, which he invested into taking his career to the next level.

He signed with 604 Records, the production company of Nickelback's Chad Kroeger. Five albums and multiple hits, awards and nominations later, he achieved those initial dreams of stardom in his 30s, which he believes was perfect timing.

"When the success finally came, I was so thankful for it that all that attitude and ego was out the door," said Pritchett. "I realize how fortunate I am."

Now in his 40s he is focused on continuing his career's upward trajectory; he'll release a new single and video Suntan City next month and plans to continue entertaining for years to come.

He also promises good times for those in attendance at the SCMAs this weekend, with the possible exception of those who end up in his comedic crosshairs.

"I know a lot of the people so I can make fun of them, but they don't know that yet."

The SCMA awards gala is being held on April 27 at Dakota Dunes Casino.

Aaron Pritchett headlines the 2013 Saskatchewan Country Music Association Awards in Saskatoon this weekend.

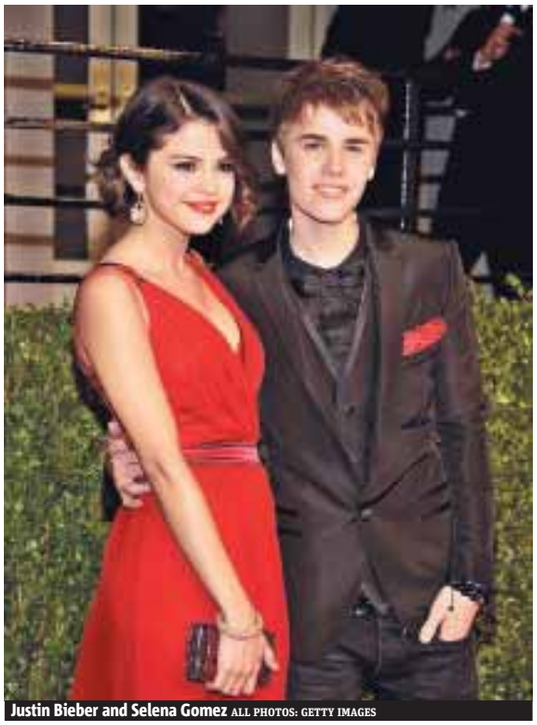
OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES



Justin Bieber and Selena Gomez ALL PHOTOS: GETTY IMAGES

The one love for Justin and Selena?

Do Justin Bieber and Selena Gomez's make-out sessions during their reunion in Europe this week mean that the couple is back together? Maybe, maybe not, according to Us Weekly.

"They have a crazy connection," a source close to Bieber says, but "they aren't back together." Another source says it's anyone's guess: "Who knows with them? They're always back and forth." If they are in fact back together, Bieber can take the credit, according to a Gomez pal: "Justin pursued Selena and she gave in," the source says.

Justin Bieber

Then I saw his ink, now I'm a Belieber

In other Justin Bieber news, the 19-year-old is continuing his mission to have his left arm completely covered by tattoos, showing off two new pieces while leaving his Stockholm hotel, according to E! News. The latest additions include a roaring tiger head on his upper arm and an angel near his wrist. Between them are an owl and a koi fish, both added within the last two months. The latest work brings Bieber's tattoo count to an estimated 14.

The Word

Sean Lowe is like a virgin, but not really

Dorothy Robinson
scene@metronews.ca

The Bachelor is a virgin no longer.

Nothing makes me roll my eyes harder than the phrase "born again virgin" unless it's a celebrity proclaiming, "We're going to be married forever!" As it turns out, Sean Lowe, who was known as the Virgin Bachelor on this season of The Bachelor for his insistence of not fornicating (again) until marriage, won't be sacrificed to the gods anytime soon.

Two sources confirm in the new issue of Life & Style that Sean did in fact sleep with his fiancée, Catherine Giudici, while the show was still airing.

"Yes, they definitely had sex," a "Bachelor insider" reveals exclusively to Life & Style. "The first time was the night he proposed in Thailand."

A second source close to Catherine confirms the flings, saying, "Sean and Catherine have hooked up already. The whole born-again-virgin thing is a bunch of B.S. It's just something he made up for the show."

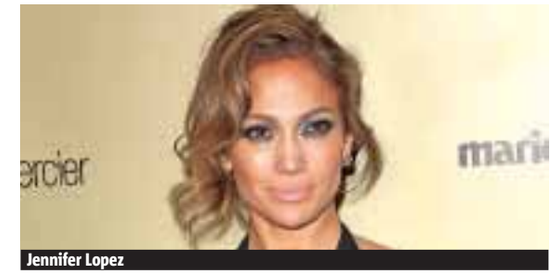
Wait. A network made up something on a reality TV show in order to get ratings? Stop blowing my mind, Life & Style.

Reese Witherspoon

Witherspoon's arrest not the end of the world, according to pal Chelsea

Everyone needs to calm down about Reese Witherspoon's disorderly conduct arrest, at least according to Witherspoon pal Chelsea Handler. "She's doing fine. She's doing fine, you know?" Handler tells Entertainment Tonight.

"She was just trying to protect her husband. I mean, everybody makes mistakes, so it's not a big deal." Witherspoon's arrest came after she allegedly argued with an Atlanta-area police officer who had pulled over her husband, Jim Toth, for allegedly driving while intoxicated.



Jennifer Lopez

Idol: Out with Mariah and back in with JLo?

The folks behind American Idol have apparently been having second thoughts about this season's judges, as producers were reportedly mulling over the idea of bringing back former judge Jennifer Lopez to replace Mariah Carey in a bid to stop the reality show's ratings free-fall, according to the Hollywood Reporter. Sources say producers had even begun negotiations with Lopez to return as soon as possible, but apparently Carey got wind of the talks and threatened to sue. The show's producers are reportedly still hoping for a Lopez guest-spot for the show's finale and are considering replacing the entire judging panel for next season.

KE$HA

Pop's queen of chaos lets us in on her messy makeup tips, her music and her new MTV documentary.

STOP. SPARKLE. ROLL.

You're about to go on tour with Pitbull. How do you keep on top of your beauty regimen on the road?
I could go for two days without a shower, but I always take care of my skin and my face. The rest of my life is chaos, but I'm pretty religious about that. I cleanse and moisturize all the time because I'm prone to having dry skin. I've also started putting a tiny, pea size amount of retinol in my night cream. It supposedly helps your skin exfoliate constantly.

In your song TiK ToK, you sing about brushing your teeth with a bottle of Jack. Are you the type to fall asleep with your makeup on?
Whisky isn't necessarily my first choice when it comes to dental hygiene. I always wash my face. Sometimes I just leave the eyes because I like my makeup better the next morning, it looks naturally wild. It creates this sexy, smoky eye that I don't know how to create myself. It looks great.

Speaking of eyes, you seem to have a thing for glitter.
I cover myself in glitter! I pour it on the ground, lay in it and roll around. Then my glitter roadie sprinkles it all over me. His job is to make sure every inch of my body is covered.

Is he a makeup artist?
No, he just has a beard.

Your hair. The waves, the cornrows, it must be high maintenance.
My hair is a constant battle. It's like the fifth member of my band. I have to keep it healthy. But it's a struggle when I'm bleaching and styling it constantly. So I sleep in Kérastase Deep Conditioner, Bumble and Bumble Mending Conditioner or Moroccan Oil. When I don't have someone plucking and prodding my head, I tie it up in a messy bun.

You recently wrapped up filming your MTV documentary, Ke$ha: My Crazy Beautiful Life. Did you keep on a full face of makeup throughout filming?
It's ridiculous … you'll see me with no makeup, no hair, no nothing. I'm running around without a bra on, looking so disheveled.

A lot of tabloids have made a big deal about your recent weight loss. Has fame changed you, physically?
Of course. I have to be stricter with myself than I ever was before. When I train for my tour, it's like I'm training for an athletic event. Every morning when I wake up, I try to meditate and get in the right mental headspace in order to kick ass. With my first record, I didn't realize how many eyes would be on me. This time around I'm prepared.

Nicola, minus the meat

Fueled by fashion.
Ex-Mugler designer signs on to Diesel after style-world speculation

The man behind Lady Gaga's meat dress is set to hit commercial street. Nicola Formichetti was confirmed this month as Diesel's first artistic director.

The collaboration follows much speculation amongst fashion press and industry insiders about his next move after it was announced that he'd be leaving Thierry Mugler.

Renzo Rosso, the owner of holding group OTB SpA, which operates Diesel, quipped to WWD, "I finally met somebody as crazy as I am. I have replaced myself and can go on vacation."

Jokes aside, what this means is that the stylist-turned-designer will be responsible for "a total view of the Diesel brand: product, communications, marketing and interior things, different things," adds Rosso.

"Different" is certainly something that the 35-year-old has down pat. Remember Gaga arriving in an alien-esque egg at the 2011 Grammy's? It begs the question as to whether the singer will be making a staged appearance at the Diesel shows like she did during Formichetti's two-year tenure at Thierry Mugler.

Our first glimpse of Formichetti's vision will come in September with the launch of Diesel's ad campaign. Sadly, we'll have to wait until autumn /winter 2014 to see the Tokyo-born designer's first collection.

Thrill your style-conscious butler

DESIGN CENTRE

As a fan of Downton Abbey, I have fallen in love with those larger-than-life homes portrayed on the show. I may not ever get to live in one, but one can dream, can't he? But since I got a hold of The Butler Speaks (by Charles MacPherson, Random House) I've also taken on a whole new appreciation for the folks that live in the lower level of those big mansions. Knowing how to domestically survive in today's busy world is one of the most important things we can achieve. A well-run household (no matter how big or small) ensures a clean, orderly and, ultimately, stylish space. Here are a few basics to turn you into the perfect home butler. I think Charles The Butler would agree.

Suck it up and get cleaning

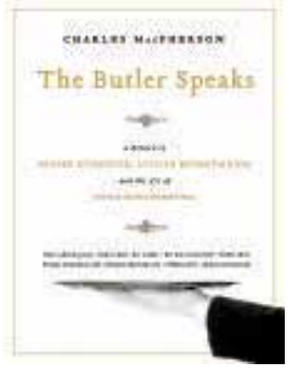
This vacuum may be small, but it has the performance of a full-size machine, and is perfect for small spaces that still need a good cleaning once in a while. Its two-tier cyclone system helps to capture microscopic dust, mold and spores for the perfectly clean home. Dyson's DC51 Animal Upright, $550, futureshop.ca

Steam perfect

From tablecloths to cotton shirts, a compact steamer will keep most fabric items around the house looking smooth. Every stylish walk-in has one, so why shouldn't you? Rowenta Pro Compact Steamer, $70, sears.ca

The Butler Speaks

This is everything you never paid attention to while living at home: stylish entertaining, etiquette and the art of good housekeeping. Read this book and you will become the chicest domestic expert around. Written by Canada's domestic authority and world renown butler, Charles MacPherson. $30, randomhouse.ca



Tray chic in bed

Wanna serve breakfast in bed? Then do it right with a sturdy-handled tray made of renewable bamboo. Its folding legs make it convenient for storage. Natural Living Bamboo Breakfast Tray, $25, sears.ca

Silver glove service

Made of heavy-gage terry and treated with tarnish preventative, this glove makes polishing precious metals a breeze. Grannies' treasures never looked so good in such little time. Hagerty Silver Cleaning Gloves, $20/pair, hagertycanada.ca

Table protection

Rhubarb balances sweetness in pork

An import from England, rhubarb was known in 19th century America as "the pie plant" because that was where it usually ended up. But rhubarb's acidity makes it a great addition to savoury dishes, too.

On the shelf in your grocery store, rhubarb looks a lot like celery, except that it's usually a fetching reddish-purple in colour. It comes in long, slender stalks, with strings running from top to bottom. To eliminate the toughness of the strings, some cooks peel their rhubarb before cooking. You can deal with the issue by thinly slicing the stalks across the grain of the strings.

Given its high water content, turning rhubarb into a sauce requires little more than cooking it. It breaks down quickly and becomes nice and thick. In this recipe, it needed some counter-balancing sweetness, so adding a splash of fresh orange juice does the trick.

As for the cut of pork on which we ladle this sauce, go with the tenderloin instead of its neighbour, the loin. Both are lean, but they call it the tenderloin, after all, for a reason. However, this isn't to say it won't turn out tough and dry if you overcook it, so be sure to keep your eye on the cooking time.

Pork Tenderloin Medallions with Rhubarb-Orange Sauce

This recipe serves six. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients

- 2 pork tenderloins, trimmed of fat
- Kosher salt and ground black pepper
- 2 tbsp extra-virgin olive oil, divided
- 2 cups thinly sliced rhubarb
- 2 tsp sugar
- 2 tbsp minced shallot
- 1/2 tsp minced garlic
- 1 cup orange juice
- 2 tsp water
- 1 tsp cornstarch
- 2 tsp Dijon mustard
- Chopped fresh chives, to garnish

1. Trim off thin end piece of each tenderloin, cutting off about 3-inch section. Slice remaining portion of each tenderloin crosswise into 3/4-inch rounds. You should end up with about 18 pieces, including 2 thin sections cut from the ends. Season pork on all sides with salt and pepper.

2. In skillet over medium-high, heat 1 tablespoon of oil. Working in batches, add pork to skillet. Cook, turning to brown on all sides, for about 4 to 5 minutes, or until the pork is just pink at the centre (about 145 F). Transfer the pork to a plate, cover with foil and let it rest while you prepare the sauce.

3. Return skillet to heat and add remaining tablespoon of oil, rhubarb and sugar. Sauté 2 minutes. Add shallots and garlic and cook, stirring, for another minute. Add the orange juice and simmer for 2 minutes.

4. In bowl, whisk water and cornstarch, then add to simmering broth in stream, whisking. Return sauce to boil, then whisk in mustard and any juices that have collected on the plate from the pork.

5. To serve, divide pork between 6 plates, then top with some sauce. Garnish with chives. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS/ SARA MOULTON, AUTHOR OF SARA MOULTON'S EVERYDAY FAMILY DINNERS

Dinner. Hoisin-Glazed Ham with Cabbage Slaw

This recipe is ideal for large gatherings as it serves 24. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients

For the ham
- 10- to 12-lb bone-in ham
- 9.4-oz jar hoisin sauce
- 1 1/2 tsp five-spice powder
- 1 tsp red pepper flakes
- 1 tsp garlic powder
- 2 tbsp grated fresh ginger

For the slaw
- 1 head Napa cabbage, thinly sliced
- 1 bunch scallions, trimmed and sliced
- 6 oz snow peas
- 2 tbsp rice vinegar
- 2 tbsp canola oil
- 1 tbsp grated fresh ginger
- 1 tbsp sugar
- Salt and pepper

1. Heat oven to 300 F. Fit roasting pan with a roasting rack.

2. Set ham on rack, then slice hash pattern over entire surface, cutting about 1/2 inch deep. Roast for 1 hour.

3. In bowl whisk hoisin, five-spice powder, red pepper flakes, garlic powder and ginger. Once ham has roasted 1 hour, brush half of glaze over surface of ham, being sure to get some of glaze down into checked slice marks. Roast another hour, then brush the ham with the remaining glaze.

4. Continue roasting, monitoring temperature and colour. Cook until ham reaches 160 F at centre, about another 2 hours. If outside of ham begins to get too dark, tent with foil. Remove ham from oven and let it rest for 15 minutes.

5. While ham bakes, prepare slaw. In bowl, combine Napa cabbage, scallions and snow peas. Cover with plastic wrap, then refrigerate until ready to serve. When ready, in bowl whisk rice vinegar, oil, ginger, sugar and salt and pepper. Toss slaw with the dressing just before serving.

Hats off to St. Louis as he turns the trick

NHL. Lightning strip lustre off of Maple Leafs' playoff berth with 5-2 win

Martin St. Louis' five-year-old son asked his father for a hat trick. With just a few days to spare in the NHL regular season, young Mason had his wish granted.

St. Louis scored three goals, and the Tampa Bay Lightning snapped a six-game losing streak with a 5-2 victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs on Wednesday night.

While the Lightning won't be in the playoffs this year, St. Louis at least has a nice memory to savour.

"I want to finish the year strong and see where it takes me," St. Louis said. "I'm really happy for my youngest son because all year before I leave he tells me, 'Get a hat trick Dad.'

"I finally came through for him."

St. Louis, who has 16 goals this season, took over the lead in the NHL scoring race with 58 points — two more than teammate Steven Stamkos and injured Pittsburgh Penguins forward Sidney Crosby.

Stamkos scored his 29th goal, two behind NHL-leading Alex Ovechkin of Washington, and added an assist.

With 55 points, Toronto is one point ahead of the New York Islanders for fifth place in the Eastern Conference. Both teams, who have already clinched playoff berths, have two games remaining.

St. Louis' goal in the second period came off a wrist shot off a slick pass from behind the net by Nate Thompson to give the Lightning a 2-1 lead.

In the third period, with the Lightning leading 3-2, St. Louis got to a rebound of Keith Aulie's slapshot off the boards and slipped the puck past goalie James Reimer.

St. Louis completed his hat trick with an empty-net goal with 2:49 left in the game.

It was his seventh NHL hat trick and first since Feb. 26, 2012, against the New Jersey Devils.

"To see what he does, it doesn't amaze me, but it amazes a lot of people," Stamkos said of St. Louis. "I'm pretty fortunate to be able to see him every day and see how hard he works and how much he wants to be the best player that he can be."

Leafs win division if ...

- The Leafs beat Florida (Thursday) and Montreal (Saturday). Montreal loses to Winnipeg (Thursday) and to Toronto. Boston loses to Tampa (Thursday), Washington (Saturday) and Ottawa (Monday). All three teams finish with 59 points. Deadlocks are decided by ROWs (regulation or overtime wins). The Leafs would win the division with 27 ROWs. Montreal would have 24 and Boston 23.

Leafs take 4th in East if ...

- Boston wins two of its three games or sweeps their final three matches and finishes first with either 65 or 63 points. Toronto beats Florida and Montreal while the Habs also lose to Winnipeg. The Leafs and the Canadiens would each have 59 points. But Toronto would win the tiebreaker based on more ROWs (27-24) and open at home against the Canadiens in the first round.

Top defender Karlsson to travel with Sens to D.C.

Ottawa Senators head coach Paul MacLean said defenceman Erik Karlsson will join the team on its trip to Washington for Thursday's game against the Capitals but no decision has been made on when he might return to action.

The star blue-liner has been out of the lineup since suffering a serious injury to his Achilles tendon on Feb. 13.

Karlsson was expected to miss the rest of the season following surgery to repair the tendon, which was sliced by a skate during a game. However, the defending Norris Trophy winner recently returned to practice and was back with regular defence partner Marc Methot for Wednesday's skate.

NHL. Kings captain Brown banned for final two games

Los Angeles Kings captain Dustin Brown was suspended for two games without pay by the NHL on Wednesday for elbowing Minnesota forward Jason Pominville on Tuesday night.

No penalty was assessed on the second-period hit to the head in the Kings' 2-1 loss at Minnesota. Brown hit Pominville in the jaw, knocking him on his back.

The suspension will cost Brown $34,324.

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
You won't miss a thing that goes on today and every piece of information will be filed away for future use. Knowledge is power and you can never have too much of it. You won't abuse it though, right?

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You may not know what you have done to deserve so much good fortune but you would be a fool not to make use of it. Someone will try to make you feel guilty about it today. Don't let them.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Resist the urge to point out others' faults and failings today. Keep your opinions to yourself and keep facts and figures that could cause relationship problems to yourself as well.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
You may wish you were some place else than where you are right now but you can still have a lot of fun. Make an effort to enjoy yourself over the next 24 hours — and bring joy to other people as well.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
What you discover about a loved one today may come as a bit of a shock but the signs have been there for ages. You may not agree with what they are doing but give them your support anyway.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
There is no point clinging to an outdated way of doing things and if you think you can, the lunar eclipse will make things tough for you.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
If you want people to support what you are going to be doing then you must explain to them, in as simple language as possible, what it's all about.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Today's lunar eclipse in your sign could cause a bit of trouble, but only if you allow your emotions to carry you away. Whatever happens, be it "good" or be it "bad", treat it all as part of the game.

♐ Sagittarius
